EXCERPTS FROM HAUSNER'S ADDRESS ON EICHMANN AND HIS STATEMENT ON THE EICHMANN CASE AT THE TRIAL IN JERUSALEM

FOLLOWING, IN TRANSLATION, ARE EXCERPTS FROM THE PROSECUTION'S OPENING STATEMENT AND ADDRESS ON ADOLF EICHMANN, DELIVERED BY ATTORNEY GENERAL GIDEON HAUSNER, IN THE ISRAELI TRIBUNAL IN JERUSALEM.

At the dawn of history there were examples of wars of extermination when one nation assaulted another with intent to destroy, when in the storm and passion of battle peoples were slaughtered, massacred, or exiled.

But only in our generation has a nation attacked an entire defenseless and peaceful population, men and women, graybeards, children and infants, incarcerated them behind electrified fences, imprisoned them in concentration camps, and resolved to destroy them utterly.

Murder has been with the human race since the days when Cain killed Abel; it is no novel phenomenon. But we have had to wait till this twentieth century to witness with our own eyes a new kind of murder: not the result of the momentary ebullition of passion or the darkening of the soul, but of a calculated decision and painstaking planning; not through the evil design of an individual, but through a mighty criminal conspiracy involving thousands; not against one victim an assassin may have decided to destroy, but against an entire nation.

In this trial, we shall also encounter a new kind of killer, the kind that exercises his bloody craft behind a desk, and only occasionally does the deed with his own hands.

True, we have certain knowledge of only one incident in which Adolf Eichmann beat to death a Jewish boy, who dared to steal fruit from a peach tree in the yard of his Budapest home.

But it was his word that put gas chambers into action; he lifted the telephone, and railroad cars left for the signature. It was that which sealed the doom of thousands and tens of thousands.

He had but to give the order, and at his command the troopers took the field to rout Jews out of their neighborhoods, to beat and torture them and chase them into ghettos, to pin the badges of shame on their breast, to steal their property — till finally, after torture and pillage, after everything had been wrung out of them, when even their hair had been taken, they were transported en masse to the slaughter.

Even the corpses were still of value: the gold teeth were extracted and the wedding rings removed.

We shall find Eichmann describing himself as a fastidious person, "white-collar" worker. To him the decree of extermination was just another written order to be executed. Yet he was the one who planned, initiated, and organized, who instructed others to spill this ocean of blood, and to use all the means of murder, theft, and torture.

We must treat the responsibility, therefore, as if it was he who with his own hands knotted the hangman's noose, who lashed the victims into the gas chambers, who shot in the back and pushed into the open pit every single one of the millions who were slaughtered. Such is his responsibility in the eyes of the law, and such is his responsibility according to every standard of conscience and morality.

His accomplices in the crime were neither gangsters nor men of the underworld, but the leaders of a nation including professors and scholars, robed dignitaries with academic degrees, linguists men of enlightenment, the "intelligentsia."

We shall encounter them — doctors and lawyers, scholars, bankers, and economists, those councils which resolved to exterminate the Jews, and among them, the officers and directors of the work of murder in all its terrible phases.

The calamity of the Jewish people in this generation was the subject of consideration at a number of the trials conducted in the wake of Germany's defeat in World War II, when mankind resolved to set up instruments of defense, through the establishment of court and execution of judgments, to ensure that the horrors of war our generation has witnessed shall not recur. But in none of those trials was the tragedy of the Jewish people as a whole the central concern.

It was among the subjects treated, sometimes it was given great weight, always it evoked sentiments of horror; but it was never at the center, since the accused at these trials were indicted for crimes against members of various nations.

There was only one man who had been concerned almost entirely with the Jews, whose business had been their destruction, whose place in the establishment of the iniquitous regime had been limited to them. That was Adolf Eichmann.

If we shall charge him also with crimes against non-Jews, committed as it were by the way, this is because we make no ethnic distinctions. But we should remember that the mission of the accused, in which for years he saw his destiny and calling, and to which he devoted himself with enthusiasm and endless zeal, was the extermination of the Jews.

Hitler denied the existence of a common basis for all humanity. According to his doctrine, there is no mutual responsibility between men. In place of the injunction, "And thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," we find: "Crush him that is unlike thyself!" Instead of the ideal of human brotherhood, we have the principle of race superiority.

Distinguishing characteristics were assigned to the sons of the master race; the skull was oblong, the complexion bright and splendid, expressing spiritual elevation. The word "Aryan" in Sanskrit signifies "master." The Aryans are of the Indo-Germanic stock, whose most highly developed branch is the Teutonic, and the choicest of the lot are the Germans. These, and only these, should rule the world with an iron hand, and they must not defile themselves by contact with other races. The purity of the race and its preservation against pollution became the immutable foundation of the Nazi political program.

Hitler knew that for the success of his lying doctrines he would have to use the age-old weapon of hate. He needed to place before the German people an object to which could be attributed everything loathsome and contemptible, an object worthy of abhorrence, which would be the absolute antithesis of the Aryan man, the Nazi, and whose existence and activities could be presented as the cause of all the failures and difficulties that Germany had encountered.

This object was the Jew. Hitler had other hates: the Marxists and Communists were regular targets for his virulent attacks. But there was this difference — the latter could redeem themselves in his eyes by turning their backs on their former faith and finding their way into the bosom of National Socialism. The Jew, however, was the eternal scapegoat. He had no way out. He was in no position to escape the storm of hate.

After the outbreak of World War II, Himmler divided the S. S. (Elite Guard) into a dozen head offices. One of these was the R. S. H. A. (Reichssicherheitshauptamt) — the Reich security main office — which thereafter was in charge of the police forces. Its central function was the suppression of all opposition, and its chief was Heydrich.

Amt (Department) Four was the Gestapo, headed by Mueller. Within this was IVB4 — the Jewish section, headed by Adolf Eichmann.

The S. S. expanded and developed into a distinct and independent body, which dominated the entire nervous system of Germany. It was actually a state within the state, with a central and decisive function. All Himmler's opponents in the struggle for power and influence in the Reich were doomed to failure. Hitler always supported his "faithful Heinrich."

The S. S. set up all the concentration camps, work centers. This organization, which was branded at the Nuremberg trials, was in fact an enormous conspiracy for the execution of crimes and horrors without precedent.

In Jewish matters, Adolf Eichmann was the executive arm of the S. S. and of its cherished offspring, the R. S. H. A.

The first and principal means of repression used by the S. S. was the concentration camps, in which were developed and perfected systems of terror employing all the resources of modern technology.

We shall find Jews among those carrying out Nazi orders, in the Jewish police in the ghettos and in the councils of elders. Even at the door of the gas chambers were Jews whose task was to calm the victims and persuade them that they were merely going to the showers.

This was one of the most satanic aspects of the entire program — to deaden men's senses, to deprive them of all emotional and intellectual vigor, to leave no more than a terrified and lifeless robot, so that it was possible to use the prisoners in the camps themselves as part of the murder machine against their own people, and the Gestapo could reduce to a minimum the number of their own men in the camps. Of course, at the end, even those robots did not escape the cruel fate of their people and were put to death with their brethren.

It is extraordinary that even in the midst of this inferno there were many Jews who succeeded in preserving the divine image, and were not broken.

With the conquest of Austria in March, 1938, Eichmann was sent back to the country in which he had grown to manhood. By this time he was already known as an expert with practical experience in Jewish affairs. Vienna was his training ground for independent work, where he first began to assume responsibility as an organizer.

At that time, Nazi policy concentrated on compelling Jews to emigrate, and Eichmann devoted himself to furthering this policy with great zeal.

In Vienna, the process was organized on the assembly line principle; a man came into the office still a citizen, with a status in society, a job, a home, and property. After being thoroughly processed, he came out an emigrant, his property gone — in part confiscated and in part invested by Government order in frozen currency of little value — his apartment registered for confiscation; no longer employed; his children no longer pupils in school, the only thing in his possession a travel certificate marked "Jude" which granted him permission to leave Austria by certain date, never to return.

We shall bring evidence of Eichmann's methods of work in Vienna and in Prague. We shall show how he treated and spoke with Jews in the best tradition of Nazi duplicity.

Some Jewish leaders still thought it necessary to make some attempt at negotiating with him, and indeed there was no other way, for he had become the master of life and death for Jews. When the road was still long to the furnaces of Auschwitz and the brutal suppression of Hungarian Jewry, we find this Adolf Eichmann daring to use to Baron von Freudiger, a man of rare distinction and leader of Budapest Jewry, the insulting expression: "Ich werde mit ihnen schlitten fahren." ("I will ride on you like a sledge)."

In sum, he reached out to every corner to carry out "the final solution," using the methods he found most efficient and suitable to local conditions.

With the satellite and conquered governments, he would sometimes use persuasion, sometimes threats, but he was always applying pressure, and always with one goal in mind: To get hold of the Jews and to send them to the camps in the East. He controlled the ghettos and the extermination centers. His position in the R.S.H.A. was unique. Where Jews were concerned, Eichmann even gave orders to the German Army.

Adolf Eichmann will tell you that he carried out the orders of his superiors. But the conscience of the world, speaking with the voice of International Military Tribunal, has declared that orders contrary to the principles of conscience and morality, orders that violate the essential imperatives on which human society is based, and negate the basic rules without which men cannot live together — such orders constitute no defense, legal or moral. Therefore, in the light of this ruling, our own law in Israel has denied the accused the legal right to submit such a defense.

But that is by no means all. We shall prove to the court that he went far beyond his actual orders, that he took the initiative in extermination operations for which he had been given no orders whatsoever, and carried them out only because of his devotion to the task in which he saw his life's mission.

When in the summer of 1944, Horthy in Hungary did not want to cooperate with the exterminators, Eichmann maneuvered by stealth to push through another death train from Kistarcsa to Auschwitz. He even used the cunning stratagem of convening a meeting of the leaders of Budapest Jewry at his headquarters, so that they should be unable, at the last moment, to plead with Horthy for the frustration of Eichmann's designs.

And when Himmler issued a final order to discontinue the extermination in October, 1944, Eichmann still managed to organize the transportation of the Jews, on foot, from Hungary to Austria by methods that made it certain the journey would be a death march.

Later he planned to poison the survivors in Theresienstadt and sought to kill Jews wherever he could lay his hands on them. His independent initiative, his burning devotion to the utter destruction of Jewry, are also shown by his ardor in frustrating every attempt at escape or flight by any individual Jew, when even his own authorities were prepared to allow these unfortunates to break through the manhunt network.

Eichmann engaged in the work of slaughter not in apathy but with a clear mind, was fully conscious and aware of what he was doing, and believed that it was the right and proper thing to do. That was why he acted with his heart and soul.

We shall prove that even after the downfall of the Nazi monster, when the entire world expressed its shock and horror about what had happened, when the Nazi leaders themselves had begun in panic-stricken haste and ostensible penitence to expose and accuse one another, even then he, Adolf Eichmann, remained faithful to his ideas and principles. He did not repent, he still believes that he did what was right and proper in destroying millions.

He knows that today it is regarded as a crime, and he will therefore be ready to give verbal and insincere expression to this view. At times he may even clothe it with a mantle of grandiloquent phrases. But we have every reason to believe that if the swastika flag were again to be raised with shouts of "Sieg Heil!" — if there were again to resound the hysterical screams of a Fuehrer, if again the high-tension barbed wires of extermination centers were set up — Adolf Eichmann would rise, salute, and go back to his work of oppression and butchery.

The Nazi programs and the methods used to put them into effect varied according to circumstances, and various phases of planning and execution may be distinguished.

Whether there existed a political, military, master plan for the subjugation of peoples and nations, or whether this developed as a result of political victories, when the world remained inactive in the face of brazen Nazi aggression accompanied by declarations of peace, Europe's statesmen submitted to threats and fulminations — in any case, Nazi self-confidence and political blackmail grew stronger and more blatant, and the final result was World War II.

So it was with the Jews. At the beginning, when the Nazis were still sensitive to the reactions of world opinion, the solution took the form of forced emigration. Though the methods were drastic and brutal, Nazi arrogance had not yet reached the point of deciding on extermination.

But when they found that it could be done, that for all practical purposes the world was silent, that circumstances were propitious, they went over to total extermination.

We shall show in this trial how much attention and care Eichmann devoted to closing every breach through which it might have been possible for any single Jew to slip through the net. We shall see how Eichmann contended with German diplomats themselves, and with various authorities in the occupied zones, who did not cooperate or do everything he wanted.

When the Pope himself interceded for the Jews of Rome, who were arrested "practically underneath the Vatican windows" (in the words of the German Foreign Ministry), and Eichmann was asked to leave them in Italian labor camps instead of deporting them, the request was turned down — the Jews were sent to Auschwitz.

But no part of all this bloody work is so shocking and terrible as that of the million Jewish children whose blood was split like water throughout Europe. How they were separated by force from their mothers who tried to hide them, murdered and thrown out of trucks in the camps, torn to pieces before their mother's eyes, their little heads smashed on the ground — these are the most terrible passages of the tale of slaughter.

Those unhappy children who lived for years in fear of the beating of a rifle butt on their door; who had been sent by their parents to the woods in an attempt to save them, who had been taught to choke their tears and sighs because a weeping child would be shot on the spot; who had been ordered to deny their origins and pretend to be Christians; who saw their fathers being lashed with whips before their eyes; in front of whom "discussions" would be carried on by the German executioners as to who should be killed first — the father or the son; who went to the open grave with "Hear, O, Israel" on their lips — these children and youths, who despite the desperate measures and concealments would finally fall into the hands of their hunters, they were the very soul and innermost core of the indictment.

Those Anne Franks and Justine Draengers, and a million others, those unplumbed treasures of radiant youth and hope for life and achievement — they were the future of the Jewish people. He that destroyed them was seeking to destroy the Jewish people.

We shall present the pictures of some of these children, swollen with hunger, frightened and crushed, with eyes frozen with terror. We shall show you the photographs of their starved bodies thrown into manure wagons, of the helpless little ones on the threshold of the extermination chambers. Perhaps we shall succeed in painting a pale and inadequate picture of the calamity, wide as the ocean, that overtook the House of Israel.

Poland was the first country to savor the bitter taste of the German blitzkreig. In Poland, Jewish suffering began with the entry of the German army. Pogroms, brutality, degradation, the burning of synagogues, the plunder of property, collective fines, all these immediately became the lot of the Jews in occupied Poland.

Thousands fell victim in the very first weeks and were killed in a variety of ways. The Jews of Jaroslav were brought to the banks of the River San and drowned in their hundreds, and the Jews of Bromberg were butchered.

In Lodz, a pogrom was held in honor of Goebbels' visit. Atrocities against Jews were the order of the day. Their beards were forcibly torn out with the skin. Synagogues were set on fire, and often, as in Wloclawek, the Jewish leaders were arrested and forced to sign a declaration that they had been the incendiaries - in fact, on the basis of this declaration, the Jews of the city were fined 100,000 zlotys on account of the fire.

The Jews were ordered to clean the streets with their prayer shawls, to burn holy books, and to dance around the bonfires, all these spectacles being photographed for publication in Die Stuermer and other Nazi newspapers.

After the Einsatzgruppen murder operations by shooting had proved unsatisfactory, the idea was mooted, as I have already mentioned, to use gases against the Jews. The first experiments were made by Globocnik in Poland and Eichmann, who realized its effectiveness, adopted this process for the implementation of the "final solution." This he confirmed to Dr. Wetzel for the Ministry for Occupied Territories, who presented a written report on the matter.

Eichmann traveled personally to Globocnik, to inform him that his experiments would be adopted on a general scale in the area under his authority as well as in other places, and sent him a man called Guenther, together with a poison gas expert. Eichmann made a tour with Rudolph Hoess to select a suitable site for the erection of gas installations at Auschwitz and also visited the Treblinka and Chelmno extermination camps to examine their effectiveness.

He was satisfied with the system, which he considered preferable to shooting. He and his department dealt with the obtaining of a blausauere gas termed zyklon-B, composed of hydrogen cyanide. This was employed in a number of extermination camps.

As late as the beginning of 1945, on the threshold of the end of the war, Eichmann was still planning to wipe out all the Jews still alive at Theresienstadt in gas installations to be erected there on his initiative, as the others had then ceased to function.

On Eichmann rests the direct responsibility for the operations of these fearful camps set up for the implementation of the "final solution." In a few of them, a last effort was made to extort a work and labor force from the Jews before sending them to their destruction.

The Maidanek camp near Lublin was established in 1941. In the spring of 1943 the Jewish deportees from Warsaw arrived at Maidanek and immediately the killing was speeded up, reaching a climax in November when in one day 18,000 were shot.

Conditions in the camps, even without taking into account the installations for direct executions, were so arranged that the prisoner was bound to perish whether from hunger, disease or pure physical exhaustion. The food provided was about one-third of the necessary minimum. The clothing left the prisoner exposed to the mercies of the elements. The quarters were draughty huts, each housing 500 people or more, two to a mattress.

The work in which the prisoners were employed until being killed was in itself a means of extermination, designed to destroy the body. The same purpose was pursued by cruelty and beating during the work and the employment of men in labors having no possible utility.

No wonder the garments and mattresses of the prisoners were perpetually teaming with lice, bugs, and insects. Tuberculosis and typhoid abounded. The Maidanek cure for typhus was execution by shooting.

In rainy and stormy days the prisoners were deliberately ordered to eat in the open. During parades, the sick and the dying were instructed to lie in the mud and snow.

Jewish prisoners were brought in their tens of thousands to the gas chambers without even undergoing registration or selection. The women's hair was cut short; gold teeth were extracted. Evidence was later found confirming that nine crates of gold and valuables were dispatched to the Reich from Maidanek. The death rate in the camp was frightful — about 180 persons a day. Children died like flies.

The selection procedure at the Maidanek camp was as follows: males to the right, females to the left, children and old persons to the center. Mothers who clung to their children were separated by the lash. You will hear the evidence of a woman who obstinately refused to let go of her baby. An S. S. (Elite Guard) man approached her, smashed the child's head on the ground and handed the woman the blood-soaked body with the words: "Now take your child."

There were cases when babies were torn apart by bare hands before the very eyes of the mothers, who went out of their minds in horror.

In Maidanek there was only one place where the children were treated kindly; at the entrance to the gas chambers each one was handed a sweet.

The Treblinka camp was set up in the Warsaw district in an isolated region close to a small Polish village. Here camouflage devices were employed on the threshold of the camp. A sham railway station was built with signboards indicating an imaginary restaurant, transit points to other stations, a waiting room, signals, and the like. It was all so arranged that from the outside the illusion would be preserved that Treblinka was just another normal camp.

But it was difficult to cling to this illusion for any length of time. Waiting at the station were S. S. men and Ukrainian policemen who would lash out at the arrivals with whips to get them to alight from the coaches. Dawdlers were shot on the spot.

Before the killing, women's hair would be clipped, and the remaining belongings of the candidates for execution were pillaged. The males were then ordered to undress and chased into the gas chambers to the accompaniment of beatings and blows from rifle butts. Thus they were herded inside naked, their hands above their heads so that more people could be squeezed into the chamber. The hatch was then closed, the engine switched on and the poison gas killed them.

Here, too, when the chamber doors were opened, the gold teeth were extracted once the fumes had dispersed, and the bodies flung into pits. Later on, installations were constructed to burn the bodies. There is one case of a man who was thrown into the death pit while still alive. He succeeded in escaping, but the farmers of whom he asked shelter handed him over to the camp command.

There was a case of a transport of Jews from Grodno who resisted entering the gas chambers. One of them even threw a grenade at the murderous Ukrainian assistants. Immediately deadly fire was opened up and the Jews were chased fully clothed into the extermination camps.

It may be stated that at least 7,550 wagon loads of Jews arrived at Treblinka, bringing to their deaths at least 75,000 people.

Secret preparations for an uprising were made in Treblinka. The ringleader was a physician, Dr. Choronzecki, on whom the Germans found an amount of money intended for the mutineers. The doctor knew what to expect and immediately swallowed poison. The murderers made strenuous efforts to revive him so that they might torture him to death. (Kurt) Franz (an S. S. man) forced open his mouth with a knife, poured water down his throat and began jumping on his stomach with his jackboots. But Dr. Choronzecki was already dead and the plans for the uprising nevertheless proceeded in secret.

A number of prisoners joined forces, succeeded somehow in stealing a small amount of arms and on Aug. 2, 1943, attacked the guards, who included S. S. men and Ukrainians. In spite of deadly fire, a number of persons succeeded in breaking through the wire fence and escaping. One of the mutineers was Rudolf Masaryk, apparently a nephew of the famous Thomas Masaryk, who out of love for his Jewish wife had followed her to the death camp.

Chelmno was erected from the very outset solely as an extermination camp. The S.S. commander would tell the new arrivals that they were being taken to work and that before their departure they would have to wash and hand over their garments for disinfection. They would be escorted to a building in which they undressed. On the walls were prominently placed signs reading "To the Doctor," "To the Washroom."

The Jews were then ordered to enter gray vehicles marked "sonderwagon (special vehicle)," each one of which held eighty to 100 people. When the doors were closed, the engine was switched on and the victims were killed by exhaust fumes.

Once the screams had died down, the vehicle moved off to the nearby forest, where Jewish forced laborers — "waldkommando" — would remove the bodies. After the teeth had been extracted and the rings removed, they would throw the bodies into prepared pits. The waldkommando worked with their legs in chains. They were put to death from time to time and new forced laborers were chosen from the transports.

According to a conservative estimate, about 340,000 Jews were exterminated at Chelmno.

Sobibor was another extermination camp set up at the beginning of 1942. It was a terminate for large transports and, according to the estimate of the Polish authorities, at least a quarter of a million Jews were exterminated there.

The men and women were stripped naked and led in a single file in long rows to the gas chambers. As in other places, the old people and children were shot separately so as not to get in the way of those marching to the gas chambers.

The extermination camp at Belsen was set up in the winter of 1941. I should like to quote a description of one such transport from Lwow, consisting of 6,700 people.

"The wagon doors open and the people, to the lashings of whips, are ordered out. Everyone is ordered to hand over clothes and belongings — crutches and spectacles as well. The women and girls then go up to a barber who with two cuts of his scissors shears off their hair, which is placed in potato sacks. After this, the march begins. Men, women, girls, children, babies, one-legged people, all of them naked as the day they were born, march together.

"At the corner before the entrance to the building stands a smiling S. S. man, who declares in an ingratiating voice: 'No harm will befall you. All you have to do', he says, 'is to breath in deeply. This strengthens the lungs. Inhaling is necessary as a means of disinfection.'

"He is asked what will happen to the women and replies that the men will of course have to work at road and housing construction. The women, he says, will not have to work.

"For a number of men there still flickers a lingering hope, sufficient to make them march without resistance to the death chambers. The majority know with certainty what is to be their fate. The horrible smell that pervades everywhere reveals the truth. Then they climb some small steps and behold the reality. Silent mothers hold babies to their breasts, naked. There are many children of all ages, naked. They hesitate but nevertheless proceed toward the death chambers.

"The S. S. men squeeze people into the chambers. The naked people stand on each others' toes. The doors close. The remainder of the transport stand waiting.

"The Diesel engine is not functioning. Fifty minutes pass by. Seventy minutes. The people in the death chambers remain standing. Their weeping is heard. Professor Dr. Pfannestiel, S. S. sturmbannfuehrer, lecturer on hygiene at Marburg University, remarks: 'Like in a synagogue.' Only after two hours and forty-nine minutes does the Diesel finally begin to work.

"Twenty-five minutes pass. Many have already died, as can be seen through the small window. Twenty-eight minutes later a few are still alive. After thirty-two minutes all of them are dead. Even in death families may be seen standing pressed together, clutching hands."

At Belsen, the Nazi moloch consumed more than 500,000 Jewish victims.

And now to the largest and most terrible of the extermination camps, Auschwitz, the death factory for millions, which will always be remembered in the annals of humanity as the symbol of horror and infamy.

At Auschwitz, medical experiments were made on human beings as if they were guinea pigs. Limbs were subjected to X-rays until the unfortunate creatures writhed in pain prior to their death. Experiments were made on the influence of paraffin and petrol injections on human skin and the effects of chemical substances on mental resistance.

The methods of punishment at Auschwitz would have shamed the most cruel barbarians in history.

The New York Times reports as follows:

As if numbed by the details of the ghastly concentration camp atrocities described by Mr. Hausner, spectators in the courtroom did not react with tears or muted sobs as some had when the prosecutor began his grim recital. They kept their emotions as tightly bridled as those of the prisoner in the glass-enclosed dock who, according to the defense counsel, "felt depressed."

But pain and horror were evident in the faces of those in the court when the prosecutor described the slaughter in the gas chambers of Auschwitz, Sobibor, Chelmno, Treblinka, and Maidanek.

At Maidanek, Mr. Hausner said there was one place where children were treated with kindness: at the entrance to the gas chambers, where each was handed a piece of candy. Two hundred thousand Jews perished at Maidanek.

At Treblinka the Nazis kept a big dog. The dog was trained so that when one of the guards yelled "jude," the dog would leap at a Jewish prisoner and bite him. Mr. Hausner said that at least 750,000 Jews died at Treblinka.

From the camp at Sobibor, the clothing of the victims was shipped to the German people's Winter Aid Campaign, which once complained that the camp had neglected to remove the "Jewish badge," a yellow Star of David, from a coat, Mr. Hausner said.

At Sobibor, too, dogs were set on people, Mr. Hausner said, and prisoners were forced to march between rows of whip-wielding S. S. (Elite Guard) men and Ukrainians. At least 250,000 Jews died at Sobibor.

At Auschwitz, the most infamous of the death camps, Mr. Hausner charged, Eichmann directed operations and gave instructions on which victims were to be killed immediately and which were still capable of forced labor. In "selection parades," prisoners marched past a camp doctor who would point a finger to the left whenever he saw someone too weak for work.

To the left meant death, Mr. Hausner said, so all the prisoners tried "to appear healthy, to stand upright, to swell out a lean breast, to raise their heads, to act as if there were nothing wrong with them."

The killings were carried out at Auschwitz by shooting, hanging and beating, but mainly in massive gas chambers, Mr. Hausner said, reports the New York Times. Two thousand victims were herded together for a "shower" in a chamber marked "wasch and desinfektionsraum" ("washing and disinfection room"). The "shower" was a flow of poison gas that killed 2,000 victims in twenty-five minutes.

Medical experiments were made on victims "as if they were guinea pigs," the prosecutor said. Sometimes prisoners were subjected to X-rays until they writhed in pain prior to death. The skeletons of 150 Jews were sent to the S.S. Institute of Race Research for anthropological investigation," Mr. Hausner told the court.

The Attorney General spared no feelings in describing the torture employed at Auschwitz. Prisoners received one-third of the minimum food requirements, he said. Some were driven insane by hunger and became cannibals.

Thousands were kept in horse stables and when these were filled, new arrivals were left in the open in snow and mud. Prisoners were some times commanded to stand from evening until noon the next day without moving.

When it was evident they were losing the war, the Nazis tried to wipe out the memory of Auschwitz, Mr. Hausner declared. The burning of bodies in crematories, which was begun in 1942 under an order "transmitted by Eichmann," ceased and the crematories were converted into air raid shelters, reports the New York Times. But, Mr. Hausner declared, the secret of the atrocities was laid bare, and now the Israeli tribunal must fulfill the dying injunction of an anonymous poetess executed at Auschwitz.

In hollow tones, Mr. Hausner read:

"Our army will go forth, skull-bone and jawbone,
"And bone to bone, a merciless line,
"We, the hunted, the hunters, will cry to you:
"The murdered demand justice at your hands!"

Eichmann rocked slowly in his tilted chair, his eyes half shut, his thin lips clamped. He took no notes during the three hours Mr. Hausner spoke. Instead of toying with his pen as he had on previous days, he clasped his hands on his lap, his bloodless fingers locking and interlocking.

Having completed the nightmarish tale of the concentration camps, Mr. Hausner poignantly recalled the intellectual and cultural contributions of European Jews: Of 257 Nobel Prize-winners during the first fifty years of the century, thirty-four were Jews, twelve of whom were expelled by the Nazis. The Attorney read a list of Jewish geniuses, starting with Albert Einstein and Sigmund Freud and including Karl Marx, Niels Bohr, the physicist, and musicians like Artur Rubinstein, Fritz Kreisler, and Richard Tauber.

The thin, 46-year-old former Polish lawyer recalled the patriotism of German Jews, reports the New York Times. In World War I they "flocked to the ranks of the Kaiser's army with zeal," he said. He observed that after the capitulation in 1918, German Jews devoted themselves to the reconstruction of Germany.

He spoke next of the destruction of illustrious Jewish communities, observing that "an entire civilization with a characteristic way of life, atmosphere, and faith, has been destroyed.

"The landmarks of Jewish history have been obliterated," he said. "The heart of the Jewish people has been wounded.

Mr. Hausner glanced at the prisoner and then resumed in a trembling voice. He said he would prove that Eichmann had been the "planner, initiator, organizer, and executor" of the "final solution of the Jewish problem" and "pivot" of the conspiracy to annihilate the Jews.

Although Eichmann killed millions of Jews, there are still some survivors who met him at the time of the crimes and these survivors will be called as witnesses, Mr. Hauser said.

"I am afraid that even after submitting all the material that we have established and all the evidence in our possession, we shall not be able to do more than give a pale reflection of the enormous human and national tragedy that occurred to Jewry in this generation," he asserted.

"Adolf Eichmann will enjoy a privilege that he did not accord to even a single one of his victims," the prosecutor went on, reports the New York Times. "He will be able to defend himself before the court. His fate will be decided according to law and according to evidence, with the burden of proof resting upon the prosecution."
